III. CONTENT (Sequencing Content)	Team Sports including traditional Filipino games (laro ng lahi)
IV. OBJECTIVES (Setting Clear Objectives and Analyzing the Tasks)	1. Determine different team sports that enhance social interaction 2. Explain the importance of team sports in achieving social competence 3. Practice teamwork and fair play while participating in team sports, including traditional Filipino games (Laro ng Lahi)
IV. PROCEDURES		ANNOTATION
A. Activating Prior Knowledge	1. Activating Prior Knowledge OPTION 1: “Think-Triad-Share” - The learner will individually write down a response using an activity sheet* to the question: “Describe a memorable time when you played a team sport or a traditional game with friends. What made the experience successful or difficult?”. *Use attached Learning Activity Sheet - Ask the learners to form triads with their classmates to share their responses. - Let a volunteer or a nominated person in the triad share key points with the whole class. Processing Questions: - What emotions did you feel during that group experience? Why? - What common factors contribute to a successful team experience?	It is inclusive because all learners are given time to reflect individually and share in small, safe groups. It is ideational because students generate ideas based on personal teamwork experiences. It is integrative because it connects personal life experiences to the lesson’s core concepts. It is contextual because it draws on real-life group situations students have faced. It is communicative because it requires verbal sharing and listening in groups. It is collaborative because learners work in triads to exchange and synthesize ideas. It is engaging because it starts with self-reflection, sparking interest and emotional connection. It is empathetic because students learn about their classmates' challenges and successes in teamwork. It is inclusive because it allows all learners to participate through movement and interaction. It is

OPTION 2: “Hula-Takbo-Pila”

- Learners will physically choose between two lines—Team Sports or Laro ng Lahi—based on the name, description, or image of a game presented to them.
- Place two signs at opposite sides of the room:
☒ TEAM SPORTS ☒ LARO NG LAHI
 Make sure there’s enough space between them so learners can physically walk or run to the correct line.
- Learners decide which category it belongs to and run or walk to the correct line. Ask a few students to explain their choices.
- Clarify the correct answer and reinforce key differences between the two.

Processing Questions:

1. What helped you decide where to line up?
2. What makes laro ng lahi unique to team sports?
3. Can some games belong to both? Why or why not?

OPTION 3: “Doctor Kwak Kwak”

- Have students form a circle. Ask them to reach across and grab someone else's hand, forming a "knot" of hands in the middle.
- Without letting go of each other’s hands, the group must work together to untangle the knot and form a circle again.
- During the activity, encourage communication, problem-solving, and collaboration.

innovative because it uses a game format to teach interpersonal skills. It is integrative because it links physical problem-solving with social and emotional skills.

It is collaborative because success depends on group effort and coordination. It is communicative because learners must talk and listen effectively to succeed. It is creative because students must think of new strategies to untangle the knot.

It is exploratory because learners discover teamwork dynamics through experience. It is experiential because students physically engage in a real-time group challenge. It is empathetic because it helps students recognize how their actions affect others.

It is inclusive and ideational because it encourages multiple perspectives of students to think critically and creatively about abstract concepts like teamwork and character. It is collaborative because it requires cooperative decision-making. The open-ended nature of the word creation process taps students’ creative thinking and interpretation. It is engaging that let students explore different interpretations. It encourages empathy because the processing questions guides students to understand other’s viewpoints.

	Processing Questions: 1. What do you think makes a team work well together, especially when facing a challenge?" 2. What kind of behaviors or attitudes might help your group succeed in this activity?" 2. Establishing the Purpose of the Lesson "We've been exploring some important ideas about teamwork and collaboration. Through the activity, we've seen that successful teamwork requires interpersonal effectiveness, clear communication, and relational harmony. As we continue with our lessons, think about how you can bring these qualities into every group setting. Now, let's do another activity. OPTION 1: "Who's Who Bingo" • Distribute bingo cards. Use attached Learning Activity Sheet • Each box contains a description linked to sports participation or traits shown in either team sports or traditional Filipino games. Examples: "Plays a team sport regularly such as volleyball or basketball." "Grew up playing Patintero or Tumbang Preso." "Knows the rules of a laro ng lahi." "Has joined a sports tournament." "Is a good team communicator." "Plays fair and follows game rules." "Encourages teammates." "Loves teaching others how to play a game."	It is inclusive because all students are recognized for different strengths. It is ideational because students think critically about what traits define effective team members. It is innovative because it transforms a typical game into a character-focused activity. It is collaborative because it builds connections between students through mutual recognition. It is communicative because students must explain and justify their choices to their classmates. It is creative because it encourages thoughtful observation and matching traits to people. It is engaging because the interactive movement and peer interaction create excitement. It is empathetic because it fosters appreciation of others' strengths and roles. “Prefers traditional games over modern sports”

- Let the learners walk around the classroom and approach classmates they believe match a particular description. They must say which box they are asking about (e.g., “I think you’ve joined a tournament before—can I put your name here?”) The learners will get the classmate’s name and signature in that square if the classmate agrees. No name may appear more than twice on a card.
- Once time is up, invite several learners to share their favorite or most meaningful match, explaining why they chose that person and how this person displayed the given role or quality.

Processing Questions:

- What did you learn about your classmates?
- What traits do you admire in a teammate?
- Why does teamwork matter?

OPTION 2: “Modified the Boat is Sinking Game”

- The teacher will explain the rules of the classic “The Boat is Sinking” game: When you say, “The boat is sinking, group yourselves by...”, learners must quickly form groups based on the given prompt.
- Instead of numbers, give category-based prompts related to sports and laro ng lahi such as:
“Group yourselves if you’ve played the same team sport.”
“Group yourselves by those who have played patintero, tumbang preso, or luksong tinik.”

Life and Career Skills Quarter 2 4

It is integrative because it connects personal life and social contexts to the lesson. It is inclusive because it allows all students to contribute individually.

It has context and communication because it allows the students to reflect on real-life situations and share their ideas.

It empathizes because students reflect on shared life experiences, and the personal reflection engages them in the topic meaningfully.

It is inclusive because they are acknowledged and grouped without judgment as to the career they wish to pursue. It is integrative because it

What surprised you about your classmates’ sports or game experiences? 2. Which games or sports do you want to try because of what you learned today? 3. How do traditional games and team sports help build friendships and teamwork?	connects values to various careers, helping students see relevance beyond the classroom. The context ties the lesson with specific professional fields of grounding learning in future relevance. It allows communication and collaboration in brainstorming ideas clearly and concisely. It engages and activates experience. Empathy is expressed in how students consider fairness and teamwork in roles that serve others.
B. Instituting New Knowledge	1. Presenting Examples “Now, as we move forward, let's take what we've learned and apply it to some real-world examples. We'll look at some specific situations that demonstrate how teamwork and fairness come to life in various fields. This will help us see how the skills we're developing here can be applied in the future, no matter what path we choose.”

OPTION 1: “Dream Team”

- Let learners think of their favorite athlete from any sports (e.g., volleyball, badminton, basketball, etc.) On a small sheet of paper, instruct them to write the name of the athlete and their sport. Let them pin or tape the paper to the front of their uniform so that others can easily read it.
- Group the class into four large teams. In each group, take turns sharing answers based on these questions:
 1. Who is your chosen athlete?
 2. What makes a strong team player (skills, attitude, and character)?
- Once all teams are ready, everyone will stand together in one big circle. The teacher will call out a random sport or Filipino games (e.g., basketball, volleyball, badminton, patintero, tumbang preso)
- As a team, quickly decide which members to send forward into this new team depending on how many members the teacher allows them to send.
- The team must defend their choices by explaining how the strengths of the selected athlete would be useful in that new sport/game. Continue the game as several sports are called out. Different members may step forward each time.

Processing Questions:

1. How did this activity show you about how strengths and values can apply across different teams or situations?
2. How does being a good team player go beyond just physical skill or talent?

The “Dream Team” activity is inclusive, creative, and collaborative, as it encourages students to think critically and work together.

The activity provides real-life examples of athletes from different sports, helping students explore how teamwork and individual strengths can be applied across contexts.

The use of random sport selection challenges students to adapt their thinking, making the activity innovative. Overall, this activity engages students’ creativity, enhances their communication, and emphasizes the importance of teamwork in diverse settings.

The “Teamwork in Motion” activity is inclusive, ideational, and integrative. It uses an engaging video to introduce students to the concept of teamwork.

Republic of the Philippines

OPTION 2: “Teamwork in Motion”

- Begin by asking students:
 1. “What’s more important in a team sport—individual talent or team coordination?”
 2. “Can a group of average players beat a team of all-stars if they work better together?”
- Let students give quick thoughts before transitioning to the video. Before the video, ask students to pay attention to the words that will be presented in the video.

- In small groups, students discuss:
 1. Which of the words struck them the most?
 2. Name three (3) words that they think are the most relevant qualities a team must possess.
- Each group shares their answer briefly with the class.

It highlights context because it encourages critical thinking about the qualities that make up successful teams and challenges students to explore those ideas in a group setting.

The video serves as a powerful visual example, making abstract teamwork concepts more concrete. The activity is anchored on exploring and engaging because it allows students to experience firsthand the importance of synchronization and trust in team performance.

The “Pick Your Fighters” activity is inclusive because it acknowledges the strength of different athletes from different fields across gender. It combines creativity and collaboration by having students choose athletes based on their teamwork qualities and deciding how those athletes might succeed in different sports.

This activity emphasizes the adaptability and transferable nature of teamwork skills and allows students to explore the real-world application of these qualities in various contexts.

OPTION 3: “Pick Your Fighters”

- On the board, post pictures of different athletes (from various sports) who are known for their skills and teamwork qualities.
- Tell students: “In this activity, you will be creating a dream team by selecting athletes from the pictures I’ve posted, based on a specific sport I call out. Your goal is to choose athletes whose skills and qualities would make them successful in that sport, even if they don’t traditionally play that sport.”
- As the teacher, call out a specific sport (e.g., basketball, swimming, football, volleyball).
- In small groups, students will discuss and choose 3–4 athletes from the posted images / digital slides who they think would perform best in the given sport. They must explain their choices by highlighting the skills or teamwork traits that would help each athlete succeed in this sport.
- Example: “I chose this athlete because their leadership skills would be perfect for a basketball team captain.”
- Each group will present their dream team to the class, explaining why they chose each athlete for the given sport justifying how the athlete’s teamwork, communication, or individual skills will contribute to the overall success of the team.

Processing Questions:

1. What qualities did you look for when choosing athletes for your dream team?
2. Why is teamwork important in every sport or physical game, regardless of the type of athlete or individual talent?

The activity is collaborative and targets communication. It engages them and their creativity as they decide to build their lineup of athletes and their strengths based on experience. It also encourages students to empathize with the diverse strengths that make a successful team.

2. Discussing New Concept

“For this lesson, our focus is teamwork and fair play. Let me introduce to you how we understand the principles of teamwork and fair play in team sports, including traditional Filipino games. Both naturally foster environments where teamwork is essential for success, and fair play is crucial for maintaining the integrity and enjoyment of the activity. Let’s explore them.”

CONTENT

1. What is Social Interaction in Sports?

Social interaction refers to how individuals communicate, cooperate, and build relationships with others. In team sports, it happens through teamwork, giving and receiving feedback, strategizing, encouraging each other, and resolving conflicts. Positive social interaction fosters trust, empathy, respect, and shared goals.

2. Why Team Sports Are Powerful Tools for Social Competence

Team sports require:

Communication – to coordinate plays and share ideas.

Collaboration – to win or complete tasks together.

Responsibility – each member contributes to the outcome.

Fair play and respect – accepting outcomes, showing sportsmanship.

4. Exploring Mindfulness in Traditional Games (Laro ng Lahi)

“Let’s explore how traditional games can help us grow in both physical and mental strength — and maybe even find a little peace in the middle of the action. Today, we’re going to play a classic Filipino game — Patintero or Luksong Baka — but with a powerful twist: we're going to play them mindfully. Mindfulness means paying attention on purpose, in the present moment, and without judgment. That may sound simple, but it's a skill that takes practice — especially when we're moving, reacting, and playing with others.

Republic of the Philippines

In this activity, I'll be inviting you to move your bodies, focus your minds, and notice your thoughts and feelings as they come and go — all while having fun. You'll learn how to stay calm under pressure, how to listen to your body, and how to become more aware of yourself and your team.”

OPTION 1: “Mindful Patintero”

- Begin with a short grounding exercise: “Feel your feet on the ground. Notice your breath. Inhale slowly... Exhale completely.” Invite students to set a mindful intention, e.g., “I will move with focus and awareness.”
- Divide the class into two teams (Taggers and Runners). Draw a traditional Patintero grid with chalk or cones (3–4 vertical lanes and 1–2 horizontal). Taggers position themselves on lines; Runners try to cross the entire grid and back without being tagged.
- Runners must move deliberately and silently, paying attention to foot placement and body balance. Taggers must practice focused gaze and controlled movements—no shouting or sudden lunges. Introduce a “breath cue”:

Republic of the Philippines
Department of Education
BUREAU OF LEARNING DELIVERY

Students take one deep breath before each run to stay calm and present.

- As they play, encourage them to try not to focus only on winning or being the fastest. Make them reflect using the following questions:

“How am I feeling right now?”

“What do I notice about my body?”

“How can I be fully present in this moment?”

OPTION 2: “Mindful Luksong Baka”

- Invite students to close their eyes and scan their body from head to toe. “Notice any tension. Inhale into it, exhale to soften.
- One student (the “Baka”) crouches in the middle. Others take turns jumping over without touching them. After a full round, the Baka raises their position slightly (kneeling → squatting → bending forward, etc.). Remind learners to play safely to avoid any injuries.
- Before jumping, each student pauses, takes one deep breath, and mentally says, “I am present.” Students must be quiet and intentional with their jumps — no running starts or rushing. If a student hesitates or feels nervous, they are encouraged to notice it without judgment: “What am I feeling right now?”
- Reinforce non-judgmental peer support: no teasing, only encouragement. Celebrate efforts, not just success.

The inclusive and integrative nature of the activity ensures that every student is involved and encouraged to participate in both the cognitive and emotional aspects of the task. The context of the scenario (team sports) and the communication required to use the DEAR MAN strategy make it an engaging and meaningful experience. The exploration of communication strategies and empathy involved in understanding others’ feelings are seamlessly integrated into the process, allowing students to develop not just conflict resolution skills but also a deeper understanding of teamwork. The overall experience encourages creativity in finding solutions while promoting collaboration and empathy in a team setting. “How can I be fully present in this moment?”

4. Skill to be taught: The DEAR MAN STRATEGY

“As we play Mindful Patintero and Luksong Baka, you’re not just using your physical skills — you’re also practicing something deeper: the ability to communicate clearly, assert yourself respectfully, and stay calm under pressure.

In sports and teamwork, communication is everything. But it's not always easy to say what we mean in a respectful, clear, and confident way—especially when emotions are high.

Today, we’re going to learn a strategy that can help us speak up for ourselves without starting arguments or hurting others, while still getting our message across. It’s called the DEAR MAN approach. The DEAR MAN approach connects strongly to team sports because it promotes interpersonal effectiveness by providing an environment that is assertive, respectful, and with

DEARMAN WORKSHEET

Name/s:	Date:
Situation: My classmate experienced a situation where (briefly describe the conflict – what happened, who was involved, what the issue was)
D – Describe the situation

The inclusive nature of the activity, paired with the integrative use of DEAR MAN, allows students to connect emotionally with the scenario while using critical thinking skills to find a solution. The context of team sports ensures the activity is meaningful, and the collaboration required in pairs helps students share ideas and learn from each other’s perspectives.

goal-oriented communication, which is crucial for teamwork, coordination, and resolving conflicts on and off the game field.

Let's explore how it works and how it can make us better teammates."

D – Describe

In team sports, players must describe situations clearly to avoid confusion. Example: "In our last game, we struggled to cover the left side of the court."

E – Express

Players need to express feelings constructively to build trust. Example: "I felt frustrated when I didn't get a chance to sub in."

A – Assert

Asserting your needs helps prevent resentment and miscommunication. Example: "I'd like more opportunities to play in the second half."

R – Reinforce

Reinforcing benefits encourages cooperation. Example: "If I get some playtime, I'll be more motivated and can help the team with fresh energy."

effective communication techniques. The empathetic aspect of considering another's conflict situation encourages a deeper connection to the issues at hand and fosters an understanding of how to handle interpersonal challenges in teams. The creativity involved in developing personalized responses and the opportunity to communicate solutions in pairs make this a dynamic and engaging learning experience.

M – Mindful

Staying focused during heated moments keeps conflicts from escalating. In practice: Avoiding arguments and sticking to the issue—like missed plays or unfair rotations.

A – Appear confident

Confidence improves leadership and team respect.

In games: Speaking up about strategies or clarifying roles with self-assurance.

N – Negotiate

Team sports require flexibility and compromise. Example: “How about we rotate positions every other game, so everyone gets a fair chance?”

3. Developing Mastery

“Great job exploring how teamwork plays out in different sports and understanding the DEAR MAN strategy. Now, it’s time to strengthen our understanding of each part of the DEAR MAN strategy. Our next activity will help you master the skill by reviewing the definitions, examples, and purpose of each step. Let’s do this activity.”

OPTION 1: “Team Talk: Solve It with DEAR MAN!”

- Divide the class into small groups (3–4 members).
- Present the scenario:
"Your team has been practicing for the intramural Patintero game. One player has been dominating the decisions during practice—assigning positions, deciding strategies—without asking others. Some teammates feel frustrated and left out, but no one has spoken up yet."
- Each group must work together to complete a DEAR MAN template to create a respectful, goal-oriented message that a teammate could use to address the situation. Prepare a group output or presentation.
- Groups will read their completed DEAR MAN response aloud.

Processing Questions:

1. Which part of the DEAR MAN strategy was easiest to complete? Which was hardest
2. How can this type of communication improve teamwork in sports?
3. Why is it important to balance honesty and respect in group settings?

OPTION 2: “1-2-3 Pass”

- Distribute small slips of paper (or index cards) to each student. Ask them to recall a real situation in a team sport where they faced or witnessed a conflict related to teamwork (e.g., unfair playtime, lack of communication, blame after a mistake, etc.).

Republic of the Philippines
Department of Education
 BUREAU OF LEARNING DELIVERY

	• Instruct them to write a short description of the situation anonymously on an activity sheet*, (Use attached Learning Activity Sheet) using the guide statement format below: * “In a (name of sport) game, I experienced a situation where (briefly describe the conflict – what happened, who was involved, what the issue was).” • Collect all written scenarios in a container. Randomly redistribute one scenario to each student (making sure no one gets their own). • Ask students to pair up (Teacher may assign pairs to ensure variety). In pairs, students will read and discuss the scenario they received. Collaboratively, ask them to write a complete DEAR MAN response in their activity sheet. Invite students to share their answers.
C. Demonstrating Knowledge and Skills	“Now, it’s time to put the strategy into an actual situation. It’s time to participate in these activities for the practical application of skills. Let’s do this!” 1. Finding Practical Application OPTION 1: “TUG-NO-WAR” • Divide the class into 2–4 teams (depending on rope length). • Rotate rounds (2 teams at a time) to allow all to play. • At the teacher’s whistle or signal, the game stops, and the team is handed a "Team Conflict Card". Example issues include: “One team member says others aren’t pulling hard enough.”	The inclusive nature of the activity ensures that all students have an opportunity to participate, whether they are physically strong or not. The integrative approach blends physical activity with intellectual tasks, while the innovative use of the DEAR MAN strategy during the game creates a fresh way to address real-world interpersonal conflicts. Creativity is highlighted through the need for teams to come up with original and effective solutions to their conflict scenarios. Context is effectively tied to real-world situations that could arise in team sports, making the activity more relevant. The communication aspect is essential as students must articulate their “Teammates are blaming each other for losing.” “Some are not listening to the caller’s strategy.” “Someone wants to switch roles but feels unheard.” • Each team huddles for 3 minutes. They must collaborate to formulate a verbal DEAR MAN response using the format: D – Describe: What’s happening? E – Express: How do we feel? A – Assert: What do we want? R – Reinforce: What will happen if we fix this? M – Mindful: Stay on topic. A – Appear confident: Speak clearly. N – Negotiate: Find a middle ground. • A chosen speaker presents it to the teacher/game master. Once a respectful and complete DEAR MAN response is given, teams resume Tug of War. Teams rotate opponents or roles after each round. Collaboration is key as students must work as a team to create a solution, strengthening their teamwork and problem-solving skills. The engagement of the tug-of-war game ensures that students are actively involved, and the exploration of different conflict scenarios allows them to broaden their understanding of interpersonal dynamics. The experience of resolving conflicts during the game deepens their learning, while the need to empathize with teammates strengthens their emotional intelligence.

	Processing Questions: 1. What part of DEAR MAN helped your team most during the conflict? 2. Did resolving the issue help your team's performance or mood? 3. How did it feel to pause a competitive moment to talk things out? OPTION 2: "YELLOW CARD" • Divide students into pairs or groups of 3–4 and assign or let them draw a "Volley Conflict Card." Example Scenarios: One player keeps hogging the ball and not setting it up others. A teammate criticizes others loudly after each error. A player is frustrated they never get rotated in. A group ignores the game plan for crucial points. • Give each group a DEAR MAN template to fill in based on their scenario: D – Describe: What's happening? E – Express: How do we feel? 1. A – Assert: What do we want? R – Reinforce: What will happen if we fix this? M – Mindful: Stay on topic. A – Appear confident: Speak clearly. N – Negotiate: Find a middle ground. • Groups prepare and rehearse their short role-play (2–3 minutes). One plays the teammate with the issue, the other(s)	This activity is inclusive, ensuring everyone participates in discussions and presentations. It encourages critical thinking about conflict resolution using the DEAR MAN strategy. By combining communication, emotional awareness, and teamwork, students develop essential skills for real-world problem-solving. The activity is based on team sports like volleyball, making it more relatable and engaging. Communication is key as students practice interpersonal skills while working together. Creativity is encouraged through role-play and props, adding fun and realism to the activity. The role-play and props keep students engaged and make the activity more interactive. By exploring different conflict scenarios and acting out solutions, students learn to navigate conflict and develop practical solutions. The need to empathize and role-play both sides of the conflict helps students better understand and manage interpersonal dynamics.

Processing Questions:

- How did it feel to speak up or assert yourself in a team setting?
- Which part of the DEAR MAN strategy was most difficult for your group to apply?
- Can being mindful and negotiating really prevent bigger conflicts in sports? Why?

2. Making Generalization

OPTION 1: "MY REFLECTION WHEEL"

Provide learners with a "Reflection Wheel" * (*Use attached Learning Activity Sheet divided into 6 sections, each labeled with a prompt:
 I learned that...

Both activities align well with the principles of inclusive, ideational, integrative, and innovative learning. Option 1 promotes self-reflection and critical thinking, fostering individual growth while also encouraging group discussion. Option 2 emphasizes collaboration and creativity, providing a dynamic, hands-on learning experience that ties the values of teamwork and communication.

In terms of the 4 C's, both activities deeply involve context, communication, collaboration, and creativity. However, Option 1 emphasizes personal reflection and sharing insights, while Option 2 focuses on group collaboration and creative expression.

The 4 E's are applicable in both activities, with Option 1 engaging students through self-reflection,

	One DEAR MAN step I want to use more is... In a real game, it's hard to... A teammate I admire because... Communication helps a team when... My big takeaway is... - Students write 1–2 sentences in each section. Then, in pairs or small groups, they compare wheels and discuss similarities and differences. OPTION 2: “TEAM LOGO CHALLENGE” - Group the class into small teams of 4–5 learners based on sports interests (basketball, volleyball, patintero, etc) - Give each group markers and a printed template labeled “Team Name: ____ Our Logo: ____” - Each group will think of a team name that reflects positive social interaction in sports. Instruct them to collaboratively draw a team logo that symbolizes one or more of these values: teamwork, communication, respect, fairness, empathy, and support. Make sure that each member contributes. - Each group quickly shares their team’s name, the meaning behind their logo design, and a value or skill they think is most important when working in teams 3. Evaluating Learning OPTION 1: “Fill in the Blanks” - Be flexible and willing to compromise. Teamwork often requires finding a solution that works for everyone. Answer: _____	exploration of ideas, and empathetic discussions, while Option 2 engages students through the creative process, exploring and experiencing teamwork dynamics, and empathizing with team members' perspectives. Together, these activities complement each other by blending personal reflection with collaborative, creative tasks. For Activity #15. 	- Using a video recorder, record their peers completing the statement: “Teampayer ako kasi...” - The activity will culminate in creating a TikTok or Facebook video reel where students share responses and reflect on the qualities that make a strong team player. Encourage them to use creative visuals: Include clips of the interviewee playing sports (if available), images of the team sport in action, or relevant graphics and texts. - Students can post their TikTok or Facebook Reels videos on a class social media group or platform for the class to see. Encourage peer feedback by asking the class to comment on the videos, discussing what they learned about being a good teammate from their peers.	innovative use of technology for video creation. The 4 C’s are applied through the context of sports teamwork, communication during interviews, collaboration within groups, and the creative video production process. The 4 E’s are reflected in the activity’s engagement through social media, exploration of diverse perspectives on teamwork, experiential learning via interviews and video production, and empathy as students connect with and understand their peers' views on team dynamics.
V. ASSESSMENT (Assessing Learnings)	“PETA: Let the Games Begin” - Divide the class into small teams (4-5 students per team). Each team will plan and organize a short match of a team sport or traditional Filipino game of their choice. The team must assign roles based on their strengths. Roles include players, team leaders, referees, or scorekeepers. Ensure that all members understand the importance of teamwork and fair play throughout the activity. - Teams will play a short match, emphasizing teamwork and fair play. During the game, encourage players to demonstrate the DEARMAN skill (describing the situation, expressing feelings, asserting needs, reinforcing
