I. Activity No. 1: (Option 2) Life Skills in the Different Domain

II. Objective(s): At the end of the activity, students will be able to:

- a. identify and reflect on different aspects of personal development: academic, career, social-emotional, and digital life.
- b. develop self-awareness, empathy, and practical coping strategies.

III. Materials Needed:

Printed scenarios (or display on screen)

Reflection sheets or paper and pens

IV. Instructions:

Instruction:

- Divide the class into groups
- Each will represent
 - Group 1 Academic
 - Group 2 Career & Vocation
 - Group 3 Digital
 - Group 4: Personal & Social
- Discuss each scenario with the processing questions

V. Synthesis:

Scenarios:

Scenario 1: Struggling with Grades

Riza studied all night for her math test, but when she got it back, she failed. She told herself, this is the end of my aspiration to be an honor student! She failed by one point.

1. Will Riza's dream of becoming an honor student come to an end? Why?
2. What unhelpful thinking can be seen in this scenario?
3. What coping thoughts can Riza have?
4. If you were Riza's friend, what advice would you give her?

Scenario 2: Feeling Lost About the Future

Kathryn trained her best to get into her dream university. However, as she got the results of her examination, she got rejected. She also got rejected in three more universities of her choice. She passed the examination of a university that she did not like, but got a scholarship with stipend. She felt that she was a failure because of this?

1. How would you feel if you were Kathryn?
2. If you were Kathryn, what good things would you think about at the university that you passed the entrance exam? Is she really a failure? Why?

Scenario 3: Your Life Online

Joseph always rants about his teachers and classmates on social media. He got angry with his teachers and classmates because he got corrected with his spelling errors in a group activity. He posted a long rant on social media telling that his teacher and classmates are very unkind and impolite that he was corrected. He even posted curse words on the class picture that he uploaded without permission.

1. How do you feel when someone tells you that you made a mistake?
2. Is it okay to make mistakes sometimes? Why?
3. What can we learn when others correct us kindly?

Scenario 4: Embracing What Matters

Maria often felt insecure about her appearance and avoided social gatherings because she feared judgment. One day, at a friend's birthday party, she overheard her friends talking about how much they admired her kindness. This made Maria realize that her value wasn't just about how she looked, it was more than just a pretty face.

1. Why did Maria feel insecure?
2. What realizations did Maria have when she overheard people admiring her kindness?
3. If you were Maria's friend, what advice would you give her?

I. Activity No. 4: (Option 1) Reflection Tree

II. Objective(s):

At the end of the activity, students will be able to:

- Identify and understand the connection between their emotions, actions, and the deeper causes behind them.
- develop self-awareness and explore healthier ways to manage emotions.

III. Materials Needed:

Printed "Reaction Tree" worksheet or blank paper / Projector / model a sample tree
 Pen or pencil

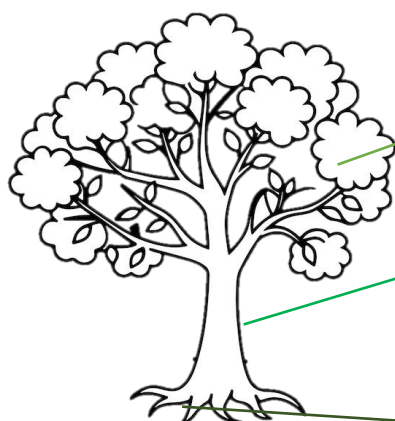

IV. Instructions:

- Distribute or display the tree visual, hand out printed copies or draw a large version on the board/projector to model it.
- Think about this situation: Your best friend is moving away to another country.

Fill in the LEAVES: What they did in that situation

Fill in the BRANCHES: What emotion was behind that behavior

Fill in the ROOTS: What life factors might have caused that emotion?

🍃 LEAVES (Top of Tree)
 - What was your REACTION?
 - What did you DO in the situation?
 e.g., I ignored my friend, I cried, I stayed silent, I yelled

🌿 BRANCHES (Middle Layer)
 - What EMOTION did you feel?
 - What was behind your action?
 e.g., I felt left out, embarrassed, anxious, angry

🌱 ROOTS (Bottom/Underground)
 - What CAUSED this feeling or reaction?
 - Think about your environment, past experiences, or influences.
 e.g., I was excluded before, my family avoids conflict, I compare myself online

V. Synthesis:

After completing your tree, reflect on:

- Which reactions were helpful or unhelpful?
- What can you do next time to handle a similar situation with more self-awareness?

I. Activity No. 4: (Option 2) How long will it matter?

II. Objective(s):

At the end of the activity, students will be able to:

- a. Identify and challenge irrational or exaggerated thoughts about failure.
- b. Understand how emotional intensity decreases over time.
- c. Gain perspective on setbacks and develop strategies for emotional resilience.

III. Materials Needed:

Positive Replacement Thoughts worksheet (two-column table)/ Paper

Pen or pencil

IV. Instructions:

1. Read the following situation and reflect on your thoughts and emotions:

Scenario:

You are worried that you will fail the Science Exam tomorrow because it seems very difficult. You believe strongly that you will fail.

V. Synthesis:

- What is the percentage that this thought will come true?(Rate from 1 to 100 percent)
- If this thought of failure came true, how bad would you feel after receiving your test paper (Rate from 1 to 100)
- If this thought of failure came true, how bad would you feel after one week?(Rate from 1 to 100)
- If this thought of failure came true, how bad would you feel after one month? (Rate from 1 to 100)
- If this thought of failure came true, what would you feel after one year? (Rate from 1 to 100)
- What would you be doing a year after you failed the test? Would you still remember it? Will the feeling be as bad as the moment that you have received the failed examination paper?
- What insights have you gained about failure, knowing that the intensity of the feeling diminishes through time?
- What can be done after failure?

I. Activity No. 5: (Option 1) Interplay Of Thoughts Emotions, Behavior and Bodily Response

- II. Objective(s): At the end of the activity, students will be able to:
- a. identify how thoughts, emotions, behaviors, and bodily responses are connected.
 - b. use the Hot Cross Bun model to analyze real-life situations.
 - c. reflect on how self-acceptance can help manage pressure and improve performance.

III. Materials Needed:

Printed copy of the story: Power Play

Hot Cross Bun Activity Sheet/Worksheet/Paper (divided into 4 parts: Thoughts, Emotions, Behaviors, Body Responses)

Pen or pencil

IV. Instructions:

1. Read the short story "Power Play" together as a class or individually.

Short Story: POWER PLAY

During PE class, Jerrom was excited to play basketball, but as the game began, he felt a rush of nervousness. His teammates were counting on him, and the pressure to perform well in front of his classmates made his heart race. His emotions, filled with doubt and fear of making a mistake, made him hesitate every time he got the ball.

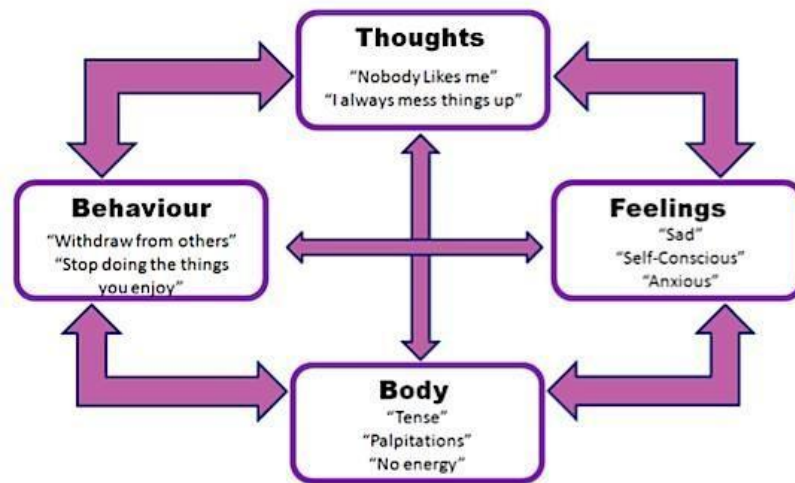

The gym environment wasn't helping either. The loud noise from his peers cheering and the coach's instructions in the background only made him feel more anxious. He kept thinking, What if I mess up? What if they laugh at me?

But then, Jerrom remembered something his coach had told him during practice: "Self-acceptance is key. It's okay to make mistakes. What matters is how you bounce back." Taking a deep breath, Alex decided to focus on playing his best, regardless of the pressure.

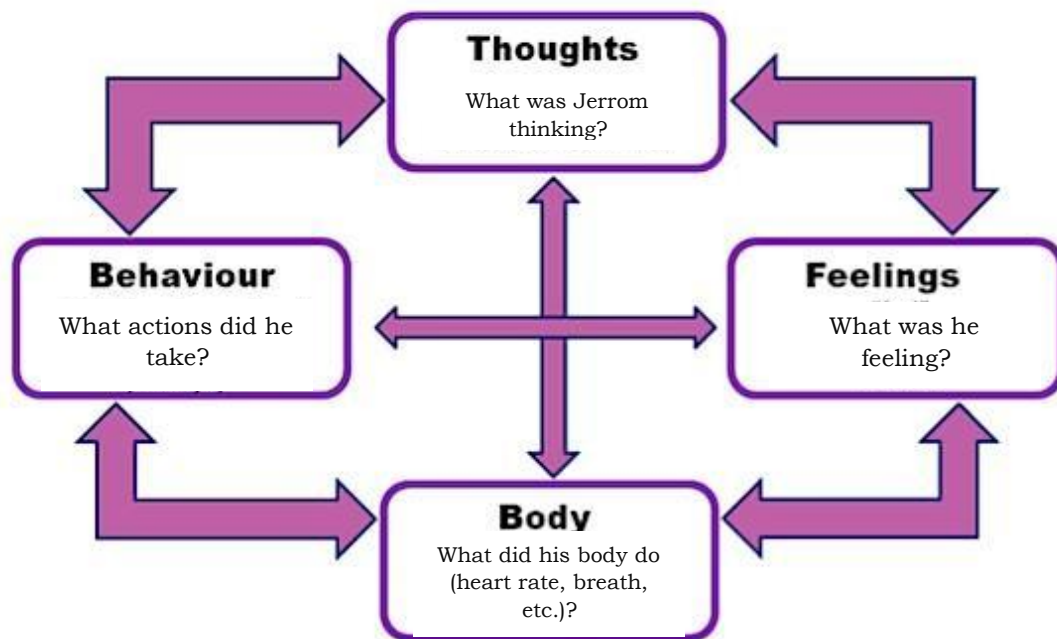

As the game continued, he missed a few shots but quickly let go of his mistakes. The more he accepted his nerves and the environment around him, the better he played. By the end of the game, he wasn't just proud of his shots, but of how he handled his emotions and the loud, distracting gym environment.

In the end, Jerrom realized that accepting himself, even with his nervousness, helped him make better decisions on the court and enjoy the game more.

2. Introduce Hot Cross Bun Model explains the thoughts, emotions, body responses, and behaviors all affect each other in a situation.

3. Using Jerrom's story, students fill in the 4 parts of the Hot Cross Bun model

V. Synthesis:

Use these reflection questions to wrap up the activity:

1. Can you think of a time when your thoughts or emotions affected how you behaved in a situation?
2. What can you learn from Jerrom about handling pressure and self-doubt?

II. Objective(s):

At the end of the activity, students will be able to:

- recognize and affirm their personal strengths and abilities.
- set positive intentions or goals for themselves.

III. Materials Needed:

1 sheet of paper per student

Pen or pencil

IV. Instructions:

- Distribute a Sheet of Paper
- Have students fold it into three columns or simply draw three labeled sections:
- I Am – Write 3 positive words that describe who you are (e.g., kind, patient, creative).
- I Can – List 3 things you're capable of doing or have done (e.g., I can help others, I can solve problems, I can express my feelings).
- I Will – Write 1–2 affirmations or goals (e.g., I will be kinder to myself, I will accept my mistakes, I will believe in my growth).

V. Synthesis:

Reflection Questions (Verbal or Written):

- What did you discover about yourself while doing this?
- How can this help you accept who you are today?
- What's one message you want to remind yourself of when you're feeling unsure?

I. Activity No. 7: (Option 1) Waves of Emotion, Winds of Decision

II. Objective(s): At the end of the activity, students will be able to:

- identify and describe emotional experiences of a character in a short film.
- understand how the environment and emotions influence behavior and choices.
- reflect on their own personal growth through challenges, similar to the character.

III. Materials Needed:

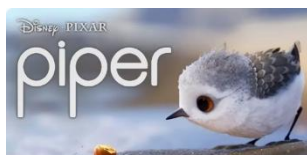

Device to watch the video (projector, TV, or individual tablets)

Downloaded Video/Internet access to view the short film: Piper – Disney Pixar

Pen or pencil

IV. Instructions:

- Show the short, animated film Piper (3–6 minutes long).

Video Link: Disney-Pixar "PIPER" - Cute Motivational short movie
<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=WIPV1iwzrzg>

- While watching, ask students
 - Piper's emotions and reactions
 - The beach environment
 - What changes happen over time

V. Synthesis:

Processing Questions:

- What emotions did Piper experience at the beginning of the story? What caused those feelings?
- How did Piper's environment (the beach, waves, other birds) affect how it behaved and made decisions?
- What helped Piper overcome fear and try again?
- Have you ever faced a situation where you felt nervous or unsure, like Piper did, but ended up doing well or learning something valuable from the experience?

II. Objective(s): At the end of the activity, students will be able to:

- identify unhelpful or negative thoughts they have experienced.
- examine the facts behind those thoughts.
- practice replacing unhelpful thoughts with more realistic or helpful ones.

III. Materials Needed:

Pen or pencil

IV. Instructions:

- Introduce the Thought Journal

Explain that we sometimes believe thoughts that aren't completely true or helpful.

This journal helps us pause, reflect, and reframe.

- Fill Out the Table

Use the example to guide students in creating their own entry.

Unhelpful Thought	When it was experienced	Facts	Better Thought
Ex. Emotional reasoning: "My boyfriend not love me"	"My Boyfriend was studying for a quarterly test."	"My Boyfriend ignored text/chats."	"My Boyfriend wants to pass."
2.

- Write 1–2 personal entries using the table. Encourage honesty—no need to share unless they're comfortable.

V. Synthesis:

Reflection Questions:

- How did it feel to write down and examine your unhelpful thoughts?
- How can this help you manage stress or self-doubt in the future?
